An Unusual View of the London Eye

The original gelatin silver print "Millenium Leap, London, 31 December, 1999" is by photographer Richard Bram. Depicting an unusual view of the London Eye, this 16" x 20" image (framed to 24" x 28") was printed by the photographer to archival gallery standards. Bram's work is represented in the permanent collections of the International Museum of Photography and Film, the Bibliotheque National de France, Prague House of Photography and other institutional, corporate and private collections around the world. Dr.

Friedrich Kasten of Galerie Kasten in Mannheim, Germany, said of Bram's work "...his pictures capture characteristic motifs from our everyday world. His photographs are humorous, droll, sometimes sarcastic and ironic, yet always full of sympathy for the protagonists of his scenes... Richard Bram fits seamlessly among the great names of classical photography." More of Richard Bram's Street Photography can be seen at <http://www.in-public.com> the home of Street Photography on the Web.
