

Bruce Wolfson
Bingham McCutchen LLP

Bruce Wolfson is a member of Bingham McCutchen's Corporate and Latin America Practice Groups. For more than 30 years, Bruce has been involved with financing and restructuring emerging-market debt.

Before joining Bingham, Bruce was a partner and general counsel at The Rohatyn Group, an asset management firm specializing in emerging markets. Prior to joining The Rohatyn Group in 2004, he was a senior managing director in the legal department at Bear, Stearns & Co. Inc. and was responsible for all legal work relating to trading, sales, capital markets and investment banking activities in the developing world.

In addition to his work in the private equity and financial services sectors, Bruce has advised regulators in the emerging markets of Latin America and Asia concerning their foreign investment rules. He served as first chair of the documentation committee of EMTA, the association of the emerging market trade and investment community, which developed standard documentation for trading emerging-market assets. He served as a member of EMTA's board of directors from 1994 to 2012.

Since 1999, Bruce has also been an adjunct professor of International Affairs at Columbia University School of International & Public Affairs. He is a frequent lecturer at universities and graduate schools.
